Business, However, Showing Some Improvement Locally

Today Than Booked Thursday

Thus far the threat of a railroad strike has caused no great demand for coal although there has been a decided increase in business recently and some of this may be ascribed to the fear of a railroad strike.

Reports from Johnstown, Pa., indicate that the strike talk has stimplated business in Central Penniyivania, especially fuel for eastern ablipments. This might apply here also in this region because what increase in business there was came from the east, while western shipments sunk lower and lower this week due to limited take shipments. No evidences of car shortage are Better at Johnstown.

A dispatch from Johnstown, Pa., states the following: "With little or no activity in the coal markets in Johnstown for weeks a sudden awakening took place here during the last few days, when the railroad strike loomed. Increased calls from the East and other points have kept the operators busy preparing for shipments. Reports from various offices of coal concerns in this for shipments. Reports from various offices of coal concerns in this ricinity show that they are practically all 'decidedly active.' Inquiries practically vanished from the market and spot orders were in vogue.
